Welcome to HU4630 Fall 2005

"Technology has always been implicitly central to an understanding of what 'English' is or can be. After all, without manuscript and pens and without paper and print technologies (the first two communications revolutions) there would be no text and nothing to read, and virtually no historical dimension to the subject at all." -- Rob Pope, English Studies.

"Technology is social before it is technical." (from Protocol: How Control Exists after Decentralization).

An alternate question for HU4630: Is it rhetorical before it's social?
